

JORDAN MURRAY

Working with some of the top agencies in the world, Jordan has graced the cover of Vogue and starred in countless international campaigns for clients such as Loreal, Sephora, Apple, Gap, and to name a few. Her grace, vulnerability and ability to connect on set have earned her an exceedingly successful modeling career and earned her a number of coveted ambassadorships including one for the relaunch of heritage brand Playboy. She is outspoken about her love for women in the industry, social justice and animal rights and spends her limited spare time volunteering with North Brooklyn Angels.

After studying theatre in high school, Jordy went on to major in International Business and Marketing at Charles Sturt University, where she was first scouted as a model. After graduating with a commerce degree, she is delighted to not be working in the field!

Born to hippie parents, Jordy moved around a bit growing up, but was raised mainly in suburban America before eventually settling in Sydney, Australia as a teenager. After being scouted as a model and differing university she relocated to New York to maximize the opportunity before realizing her dream of becoming an actor. An up-and-comer in the industry, Jordy now splits her time between New York and Los Angeles where she continues to seek challenging new roles and opportunities.